A correspondent of the Buffalo Commercial touches for the following incident as occurring on a street railway car in that city: Old gentleman from the country waiting on crossing for car to pass. Driver looking for passengers nods to him. O. G. returns salute. Car stops. O. G. enters, passes directly through the car, opens front door, and thus addresses the driver: "What's your name?" Driver: "My name's John Smith." O. G.: "Where do you live?" Driver: "I live on Rhode Island street." O. G.: "Why, I don't know you." Driver: "Who in - said you did?" O. G.: "Well, what did you bow for then?" Driver: "G'lang."

DEACON TALMAGE in his lecture in New York, Friday night, said that Louisville was the most lied about city in the world; perfect order reigned there; clergymen do a good business and in fact made it out to be a glorious and highly-refined place, instead of an external opening of the infernal regions, as we found it to be when there. Perhaps the Deacon of the Tabernacle is more hardened to sin than we are.
